To Whom it May Concern,

America is a democratic country that wishes to set an example for the world to follow. The American Constitution allows the freedom of religious belief, so I am told. Yet it wishes to deport an established leader of such a belief on the grounds that his silence negates such a position. It is actions such as this that make the U.S.A. seem mean and petty in the eyes of the world.

The spiritual presence of this man, combined with his published and recorded works is merely one aspect of man's need for some spiritual guidance through a materialistic world of immediate survival. To deny a group of people the presence of their spiritual leader was the Roman motive of the crucifixion. I expect more from the so-called enlightened and educated American establishment from whom you have the mandate to represent.

Purely for the sake of the history of the U.S.A., do not put your selves on the level of the petty and ignorant and intolerant dictators with which this planet abounds.

Martyrs are not born they are created by fear. Let the U.S.A. practice the freedom it preaches.

Yours sincerely
