To Whom It may concern

I'm a 22 years old girl from Denmark. Until I was 16 years old I lived a sort of nice life, without any problems. My father had a good business going, selling houses and made enough money to give us all, we felt we needed. Anyway I always had this feeling that I wanted something more, but I didn't know what it was.

Then in 1977 it happened, that my two bigger brothers had an accident with their car, and they both died. That really showed me, that life can end so fast, so I started looking for something that could give my life as much fulfillment as possible. At the same time I was still living like everybody else, going to school, making my examinations and so on.

I 1980 I finished school, and I felt that now I have to decide what to do with my life.

So I thought of a lot of different things, but nothing felt really satisfying. Then I started thinking about it really deciding it

I suddenly just went to Poona to see Bhagwan. As soon as possible I went to the Ashram, and I immediately knew that this was the right thing, so I took sanyas about a month later.

That was exactly what I had wanted. I felt that now I had found it. This was the only man, who could help me living my life, as good as possible.

I stayed in Poona for a while and I had a really good time. The only thing that bothered me was that Bhagwan's health was getting worse and worse. Finally it was decided, that he had to leave India.

Then he went to Oregon, and I went back to Denmark.

Now I'm visiting him here, and I can see how much his health has improved.

We had a seven-day festival with satsang every day. That means being with Bhagwan in silence. To be near him again feels like finally being home again, being showered with all his love. It feels like exhaling and just falling into something very, very soft.

Coming to see him here once a year, is like getting filled up again, and then I'm ready to go out in the world, living a normal life, still being happy to feel his love in my heart.

His existence is a kind of putting everything into their right places. I really hope, that he will be allowed to stay here and do his work as our spiritual leader

Yours sincerely
